

Methods of Team Communication

Working from home is not the same as working in the office.

There are fundamental barriers to communication when humans aren't physically close. These barriers impact your team and business in ways that threaten relationships, collaboration, culture and ultimately innovation.

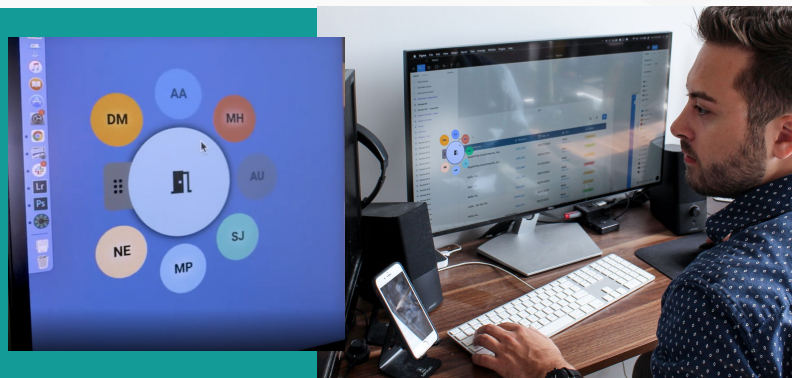

Pre-pandemic tools were never designed for this new reality.

They force us into impersonal and formally structured modes of communication. The result is endless chat threads and more meetings. In an office setting, these means of communication are actually secondary.

Frequent and personal interactions lead to high-performance, high-trust teams.

When working in an office together, we all prefer spontaneous interactions. We turn to our seat neighbor to ask for input, help or simply to find out about their weekend.

Connect is a software application that allows users to have audio-only conversations with team members spontaneously, as if they were in the same room together again.

For Team Members

- Video conferences are exhausting, unnatural and too frequent.
- Chat messages are impersonal, lengthy, and often tedious.
- Working remote can leave you feeling isolated with no opportunity for spontaneous and personal interactions with your teammates.

Using Connect makes you part of the team again. Real interactions are more personal while requiring less effort. This means less time spent in meetings.

For Managers

- Time consuming, formal video conferences are currently the only way to have real-time interactions with your team.
- Chat messages are asynchronous and can be ineffective at communicating urgency.
- Working remote can leave your team unsure of your availability should they need assistance.

Using Connect makes it easy to have conversations with any combination of team members again in real-time. As a manager, you can choose to be passive, active, public or private with your team.
